HARROW, GILBERT

FREDERICKSBURG ACADEMY. Founded 1783

The Rev. John Woodville of Whitehaven, England for years minister of St. Mark's Parish, Culpepper County (VA) was about 1789, Professor of the Humanities at Frederickburg Academy. Gilbert Harrow was Professor of Mathematics.

(Slaughter, History of St. Mark's Parish, Culpepper, p. 49) in A.J. Morrison, The Beginnings of Public Education in Virginia, 1776-1860, (Richmond, VA; 1917) pages 109-111.

By 1800 the school had been "discontinued for several years" and its funds went to the Charity School which had been established in Fredericksburg in 1796; the Academy had, "as first established, looked especially to charitable purposes and seems to have been converted entirely to those ends."

The Papers of George Washington. Vol. 5:97-98 (Dorothy Twohig, Mark A. Mastromarino, and Jack D. Warren, eds., 1996) Harrow, Gilbert, Volume 5 covers the first half of 1790.

Notes to The Will of George Washington at

<http://gwpapers.virginia.edu/documents/will/text.html>

9. When Washington returned to Mount Vernon at the end of the war, eleven-year-old George Steptoe Washington and eight-year-old Lawrence Augustine Washington, sons of Washington's dead brother Samuel and his fourth wife, Anne Steptoe Washington, were living in Alexandria under the care of David Griffith, the minister at Christ Church. When Washington went to New York in the spring of 1789, his friend Dr. James Craik took the boys into his house. At the end of the year, with Washington's approval, Craik removed them from the Academy and placed them in the school of Gilbert Harrow in Alexandria in order to have them concentrate on the study of mathematics. On Tobias Lear's advice, Washington in the fall of 1790 had his nephews brought to Philadelphia and enrolled in the college there, where they remained until their graduation in 1792.
